The assault began before the main landing to knock out German Guns at the top of the Cliff. Two U.S. Navy Destroyers gave support, Rockets were fired to get ropes atop the cliffs.

The rangers destroyed the guns that had been moved inward.

Determined to hold the vital ground, yet isolated from other Allied forces and outnumbered the Rangers fended off several counterattacks from the German 916 th regiment until units of the American 29th Infantry Division's broke through from
